Dear Friends,

Fiscal year 2023—my first at the Frye—was a time of rebuilding after COVID interruptions and expanding the museum's capacity to serve audiences. I am delighted to report that the year was filled with activity, increased numbers of visitors, and tangible strides toward growing our vision for the future of Seattle's only free art museum.

Our 2023 exhibition program embodied our mission to showcase living artists' visions bolstered by the bold art histories that inspire them. In February 2023, Seattle audiences flocked to our presentation of Flying Woman: The Paintings of Katherine Bradford, the first museum survey of the East Coast, octogenarian painter known for her vibrant palette, eccentric compositions, and personal, unpredictable approach to figurative painting. Complementing Bradford's exhibition, a small but mighty presentation of the iconic American modernist Marsden Hartley demonstrated how a visual conversation can be had between two artists, even those working a century apart.

We brought to the museum two artists with fascinations for their chosen mediums' alchemical potential to change states: Kelly Akashi, whose work breathes new life and meaning to photography, metal, wax, and glass works, and Clarissa Tossin, whose works of film, sculpture, and works on found paper show how materially linked are human consumption, global capitalism, and colonialism. The largest presentation of both artists' work to date, these exhibitions furthered the Frye's commitment to showcasing the work of emerging US-based artists ready for wider visibility and critical attention.

We demonstrated our ongoing work as a collecting institution with A Living Legacy: New Acquisitions in Contemporary Art, a display of artworks recently brought into the Frye's permanent collection representing a wide swath of today's breakthrough artists, including Amoako Boafo, Sky Hopinka, Gisela McDaniel, Bony Ramirez, and Tschabalala Self, among others. Ranging from altered photographs to mixed-media assemblages, the new works expand or complicate narratives around genres such as landscape and portraiture traditionally associated with the Frye's Founding Collection of nineteenth- and twentieth-century European and American art.

We finished the year with presentations from esteemed local artists. Soft Boy, the first West Coast museum show of work by longtime Seattle artist Rafael Soldi, which included an ambitious three-channel cinematic installation, explored how gender expectations are encoded—and can be subverted—within language and childhood games. In Seattle artist Hanako O'Leary's Izanami, the provocative ceramic objects embraced visual storytelling, interweaving Shinto mythology and contemporary feminist ideologies. Tacoma musician and educator Antonio M. Gómez helped us bring back the beloved Frye Salon but with a twist: his LINEAJES installation interrupted the gilded display of paintings with sights and sounds that foregrounded an intercultural artistic heritage long obscured by the Western canon. At Gómez's invitation, the street artist Angelina Villalobos Soto, aka 179, created a mural of vines twisting around the paintings in Frye Salon, evoking intertwined cultural lineages and the continual metamorphosis of artistic expression. Garnering high attendance and critical reception, the palpable sense of respect and admiration for these artists from the area arts community underscored the value in making the work of local artists highly visible in our program.

As always, our dedication to lifelong learning and public engagement remains steadfast; we had an ambitious series of engaging public programs and community-partner events throughout the year, including artist talks, gallery tours, scholarly lectures, music performances, and more. We relaunched the full scope of our Creative Aging program and additionally refined or newly offered series that connect art with wellbeing, like Mindfulness Meditation and Art + Medicine, which brought local doctors into the museum to hone close-looking skills and explore empathy through discussions of art. Perhaps most impactful, Field Trip to the Frye returned and welcomed K-12 students from across Seattle back into the galleries and our in-house art studio to learn and make with our passionate team of teaching artists.

Further on the topic of relaunches, we were elated to reopen the Frye's café in November in partnership with the local, James Beard award nominated chef Grayson Corrales. Called MariPili at Café Freida, a totally new menu and dining experience aligns with the Frye's goal to bring dynamic experiences to museum goers—the cuisine is inspired by the chef's Galician heritage with unique Spanish dishes that are as approachable and affordable as they are delicious. Acclaimed artists Elizabeth Corkery and Graham McDougal of Print Club Ltd. refreshed the space with swirling blue and white ceiling murals, colorful tile work, and geometric-patterned drapery, all of which came together to tell the story of the art, food, and people who inspired the café into being.

We continue to expand our base of support, and we received several foundation and government grants that were instrumental in supporting our programs and general operations. The support of our members, too, provides essential resources as well as enthusiasm. Indeed, we are thrilled to report that the number of household memberships is consistently growing and that our premier patron groups including the Contemporary Council and Art Circle are back in full swing. As we grow our set of friends, we gain so much from experiencing the value of art and culture together with those who champion art, artists, and the Frye.

Along with our supporters, I am also deeply appreciative of the Frye's trustees, staff, and the artists and culture workers who make themselves available to offer counsel, further our work, and encourage our vision. And most importantly, thank you to the diverse Seattle communities and audiences for giving us the opportunity to serve you with Art.

In Community,

Jamilee Lacy
Executive Director
